50X1-HUM

The report summarizes articles from 1947 issues No 6, 7, and 8 of Voyennaya Mysl and 1946 issues No 2 and 3 of Tyl i Snabzheniye Krasnoy Armii (Journal of the Rear Services of the Red Army).

1. "On the Strategic Cooperation of Fronts (Groups of armies)" by Major General M. Talenski. In this article the author remarks that experience has shown how much efficient cooperation between fronts (groups of armies) during operations depends upon the following: Clearness about the missions assigned to the individual fronts; close coordination of their operations; availability of adequate forces and equipment guaranteeing the accomplishment of missions assigned to the individual fronts; availability of a mobile reserve of personnel and equipment for employment in the desired strategic direction; and close coordination of efforts of the fronts employed in the operations concerned. It is stated that it is the mission of the Supreme Command to see to it that the individual fronts cooperate efficiently by clearly defining the objectives of the operations, the missions of the individual fronts, the methods applied in their cooperation and the tactics to be used. The necessary forces and means of operations must also be supplied by the Supreme Command. The supreme headquarters in charge of the overall operations corrects and improves the operational plans of the fronts and directs the course of operations. The author mentions that theoretical mastering of the problem of strategical cooperation along the lines shown by Comrade Stalin during the Patriotic War is one of the most pressing tasks of the headquarters of our Fronts.

2. "Geographical Factors Influencing the Conduct of Operations" by Lieutenant General P. Yarchevski.

3. "On the Question of the Control of the Seas" by Rear Admiral I. Yeliseyev.
